

Whatever happened to the idea of privacy? You can claim all you want that the world has "changed since September 11th" and that this is a necessary measure in combatting terrorism, but that logic just doesn't hold up. Terrorism has been a worldwide threat for 30 years, and just because you're only now starting to get around to dealing with the problem does not give the government the right to infringe upon the privacy of the citizens they are supposed to be serving. Have a warrant? Then monitor data all you'd like. Otherwise, stay the hell away from my internet traffic, as well as that of every other honest American.
